- What did you do this week?

This week we spent most of our time working on collecting sources for the deliverable that is due soon. We analyzed sources regarding Chicago across a number of websites, and collated them in a document. A version of this document is available already but has not been posted to the website as of yet. We are gearing up to organize and begin collaborating on the project as a whole.

- What do you plan on doing next week?

Next week we will work together to work on the Data Extraction part of our project. This will involve scraping information from various websites like Yelp and parsing it in a reasonable fashion. We will need to create a place to store the data we scrape, which will likely be our repository. Any major achievements we will add to our website, if necessary.

- Are there any blocks or impediments that keep you from doing your work?

So far this week we had to spend most of our time studying for the exam this week. I know I was certainly taken off guard with how quickly the exam date approached and needed to put a serious amount of time into studying, that would have otherwise been dedicated towards the project. As we all have lives outside of school, it is difficult to manage time between the class and the project, and sometimes one has to take priority over the other. But next week we will not have this obstacle.
